The games, which were the interesting first teature after their arrival at the park, included a hose cart race for the old vets of Hose 31 and 13. Hose 31 was declared the winner and awarded the prize, a beautiful fire beliet for decorative purposes.

A race for men over fifty-five years of age was the next contest, and the silver and bronze medals for the winner were pinned to the breasts of H. Hedden and A. Liscomb. Prof. Dodworth started his music going for the boys in the evening, and although there were not many red shirts on the floor, the veterans had plenty of sons and daughters there who did dance while their fathers and mothers looked on from the tables, enjoyed their glasses of beer and revived experiences. Sayings of the Sages and Humorists of the Future.

A gentleman riding came to the edge of morass, which he considered not safe. Seeing a peasant-lad he asked whether the bog was hard at the bottom, "Oh, yes, quite hard," replied the youth. The pending election is of the greatest importance. If it gives the power of the Government to the South, another such victory would make it permanent, and an appeal to arms sooner or later would be inevitable. On the other hand, the success of the loyar people will bring changes that will remove the present and future peril. It is worth the utmost possible effort and the greatest sacrifices to obtain this result. The civilized world will be ever debtors if we secure it.

Four or five years ago a well-known up-town physician did a little favor for the New York Athletic Club members. While Lucky Baldwin was talking with the writer at a table in the Hoffman House cafe the other night the conversation was interrupted by a fellow California horseman come to beg the favor of a few bales of hay. California horses receive their nourishment from a peculiar food, perhaps as good if not as famous as Kentucky's bluegrass. It is cat and wheat hay and has never known rain. Even Eastern-bred horses will pick out the California fodder from the best timothy, no matter if well mixed in the manger. California horses would have to be starved into eating anything else:

That wretched Futurity course at Sheeps head proved every bit as bad as it was said in this column that it would be. Every class and condition of race-goers condemned it yesterday. The new Futurity course hasn't yesterday. The new Futurity course hasn't even the one virtue claimed for it. It is not straight. The start, hidden way down somewhere in the direction of Connecticut, is descending, then comes an uphill stretch and a sharp corner into the homestretch of the regular track. That it is an abomination every one of the 40,000 spectators of yesterday's great race agrees.

Talk of the great time and the two-year-old "true" running to be had over the Sheepshead Futurity course! Why, Proctor Knott didn't run within twenty yards—nearly seven leng hs—of his Monmouth Junior championship time, which was over a curved course.

News of the success of " Capt. Swift." the play secured by Manager A. M. Palmer for this country, has already reached the city. The play was obtained by Charles Overton, who leaves London next week for America with the models and manuscript. Beerhohm Tree, who played the leading part, that of a gentlemanly, pathetic villain, made a great hit. Mr. Tree became first known by his creation of the part of the curate in "The Private Secretary." His performance, Ma-cari, in "Called Back." was also a characterization that won him renown. In "The Private Secretary" it was he who introduced the catch-phrese "Do you know," and other changes suggested by him made the success of the play, Beerhohm Tree has several times negotiated for American engagements.

How did they get there, and how did they get away? It looked like rather a difficult question in the morning. There had been big races at Sheephe de de lore, and everynody had not been satisfied with the transportation facilities. Improvements were made it is rue, for when the great Suburban was run in June, every person who wished could be on his way home within forty-five minutes after the day's sport was over. Here was a racing event, however, that threatened to attract more person however, that threatened to attract more person let han even the Suburban, and preparations were made accordingly, and nobody was hurt, and everybody—except the losers—was happy.

Those people who siways stand in front of a theatre from 5 o'clock in the afternoon until the doors open, and then rach as madily as though the housevere packed, came first as usual. For the most part they crossed on the Thirty-fourth street ferry to Long Island City and took the Long Island Ralirona. Taey had lunch baskes and turf guides and private tips, and they got very good seats, which they descrited in their excitement later in the day when they needed them most. A few were there at 10, 30 o'clock, and quite a respectable little knot came siong at 11. About noon the 1-al roan of the day began. Merchants and bankers and men about town, in fact everybody whose business called them downlown during that part of the day, patronized the four boats that ran from the foot of Whitehall street to Bay Ridge. Before I o'clock the atreet in front of the ferry house was blocked up with men, women and children. The enterprising gentry who had purchased grand stand tickets on "apec" did a thriving trade in consequence at an advance of 25 cents on each ticket. The boats were loaded, and when not another renaure could be squeezed in the bell sounged, the revent of the day was nearly ready, there seemed to be just as many people clamor.nx for tickets as there and been an hour before. motherly old lady in a sob cap, stood on the platform and unmercifully chaffed three spin-leshanked young men who carried walking-sticks that appeared to equal their own legs in circumference.

"Dear girls," said the old lady, beaming on them over her speciacles, "they will have their joke. All so strong and big, you know. Have been borosewomen ever since they were knee-high to a grassbopper. Those two dark girls are from Washington. That one with the red cheeks and white teeth is a Western girl. She can ride a broncho with the best of them. The other two belong here in New York. None of them has ever seen a horse race before, and they are just crazy over it." The "dear girls" were so full of life and laughter, and shot such roguish giances at the slender youths, and said such cutting things that the young men retired to the further end of the platform, where they were out, of hearing. Between ten and affrien thousand people went by this route. The Brighton Beach road carried ten thousand people, and all kinds of conveyances, from the tarmer's buckboard to the trotting suiky, brought a thousand more.

Supt. Barton, of the Long Island road, had foreseen that the day would be a big one, and ne changed the schedule to accommodate the throng. Trains were run at afficen minutes' headway from if until 2 o'clock, and they were made up of from the not birteen cars. This was from Bay Hidge and Long Island City. At 12 o'clock, when the boot Sylvan Gien arrived, loaded down to the water's edge, a train of seveniesn cars was made up. Two engines were required to move it, and 1,700 people filled it. Another train of fitteen ears foilowed with a powerful engine. Thirteen sundered persons were packed as close as brothers in the seats, on the steps and hanging from whatever projection they could find finger-room. Those who came by the Brigaton Beach route were content to give up their places so that they would be in a position to make a dash for the train the moment the Futurity Stakes were run. A peculiar incident, by the bye, in connection with Mrs. Fiske's play, is to be found in the fact that although it was written for Joseph Haworth, who arranged with J. M. Hill for its production, and who was to be starred in the piece, the young actor's name is no longer "featured." In other words, he is an ordinary member of the cast. This was a great surprise to Haworth's friends. The business of 'Philip Herne" at the Fifth Avenue Theatre has not been startlingly brilliant.

"BOCCACCIO" AT WALLACK'S.

Little Miss Laura Moore, daintily clad in palest pink and wearing a long Marguerite plait of golden hair in charming pendulosity, soon won her way into the affections of the large audience at Wallack's last night, more by reason of her pretty demureness than by the volume or quality of her soprano tones. Col. McCaull's latest acquisition has a small, pure voice, which she knows how to use to the very best advantage. It is nighly cultivated and extremely agreeable,

Miss Moore is weak dramatically. She begun her evening's work in "Boccaccio" with just a suspi-cion of a French accent and a Theo-like manner. These she fortunately discarded later on, and was her own refined, ple-sing little self.

"Boccaccio" made a great hit. The full strength of Col. McCaull's admirable company was dis-played. Miss Marian Manola did the best work she has ever done in this city in the title role. As the country boy, in the second act, she was simply admirable. Throughout the performance her artistic methods and tuneful voice delighted the an-De Wolf Hopper was funny, but there is a limit

"Struck Gas," with little Miss Carrie Tuteiu as the star, was the play at the People's Theatre last night. his Tutein sang a number of songs, and the andience applauded her with a great deal of fervor. T. J. Cronin, as Billy Buffers, made a distluct hit. "Struck G s" is not at all a bad play of its kind. It is pervaded by Miss Tutein, who would render a much worse play acc ptable.

There was a great "time" at Harrigan's Park Theatre last night. The popular manager opened his season at the house where he is so well appreclated, by the production of a new play which he has called "Waduy Googar." The play deals with the fortuces of a metropolitan hackman and his wife and the life of an Italion girl whom toey have a opied. It is full of local color, which, of course, includes a great deal of political talk.
There are some cleverly drawn characters in the play, and Mr. Harrigan bimself, as Waduy Googan, contributes as much to the success of the entertainment as ever. Four songs by Dave Braham are introduced. They are not as good as Mr.
braham has led us to expect his efforts should be,
Mrs. Yeamans as an Irishwoman, was remarkably funny.

"Around the World in Eighty Days" pleased a large audience at the Windsor last night so well that recalls followed nearly every sot. The play is not so magnificently "spectacled" as Ar. Rirally was wont to have it, but severas of the scenic effects were quite striking. The company includes W. J. Fleming, the original Phiness Fogg.

BIJOU OPERA-HOUSE.

The Bijou Opera-House, newly decorated and looking very bright and beautiful, was opened last night under the management of Mr. J. W. Hosenquest, and a large audience gathered to see Mr. Holand Reed in David D. Lipyd's successful compedy. "The Woman Hater." The play is very funny and it was effectively played by Mr. Reed and his company. At the end of the third act the actors were called before the curtain and a big floral not seen own was presented to Mr. Reed. The comedian acknowledged the cordial greeting he received in a witty speech which caused almost as much laughter as the comic situations in the play.

"The Woman-Hater" is booked for a probably successful run of lour weeks.

"A cruel pin, sticking in his coat-pocket, tore his hand, poor fellow. He assured me it was but a mere acratch he received, but the wound bled quite freely. I hope it will not produce tetanus." replied Emily. "It will produce a swifter death than that," thought Maud. "He will be dead ere the neck of a long, writhing serpent, whose body gleamed and flashed scinut lant in the mellow light, as it strove to free itself from the death-gr p of the va orous bird.

Maud rushed to the door and, flinging it wide open, uttered a piercing cry for help. It came in the person of her father, who, seeing at a glance how matters stood, left the cockatoo to wage battle with the deadly reptile, while he attended to his now fainting daughter.

tile, while he attended to his now fainting daughter.

How the rattlesnake had gamed ingress to Mand's chamber was a nine days' wonder in Mr. Mon ague's household; but as that young lady kep: her secret inviolate, a totally erroneous hypothesis was accepted.

Fervently thankful that her evil design had been frustra ed, now that the full enormity of it became clear to her calmer mind. Mand tendered the olive-branch to Cent Firmstone, and on his marriage-day no one offered him more sincerer congratuations than the fair girl who had planned the dayilish scheme for his annihilation.

A SUBTLE SCHEME.

HEAR you are going to marry my cousin, Emily Seymour, Mr. Firmstone. Men are very fickle. Scarcely two months ago you were languishing at my feet, uttering vows of undying constancy; and, when I broke off my feet, uttering vows our engagement, you talked about hiding your sorrow in an early grave, and nonsense of that sort," said Maud Montague, addressing a handsome young gentleman who had lounged into a picture

"You compelled me to resign all claim to your hand; afterwards I withdrew my love of my own free will. Can you blame me for so doing?" replied Cecil Firmstone, softly, so doing?" replied Cecil Firmstone, softly, but with calm dignity.

"No: I could pity you now, if you deserved compassion. You do not understand Emily yet. When the sunshine of her smiles gives place to the tempest of her anger, so much the worse for you;" answered Maud, sneeringly, as, with scornful action, she swept from the gallery.

"He shall not live to wed her. I have loved him, but now I hate and despise him," murmured Maud, as she escended the stairs of the picture gallery, subsequent to her interview with her late lover.

In no enviable frame of mind, she walked rapidly across Union Square, maturing her plan for revenge, nursing the wrath in her boson until it fired and maddened her.

Pursuing her way, she presently turned into a by-street, and halted before the door of a shop, the windows of which, being filled with studied anima's and birds, indicated it was tenanted by a naturalist. She read the name upon the sign, and entered the place.

"You are the proprietor of this establishment, I presume?" she said, interrogatively.

NY

ment, I pre dune?" she said, interrogatively, to a weszen-faced o d man.
"Yes, ma'am. What can I do for you?" he replied, glancing instinctively towards a wicker basket containing a litter of Pomerwicker basket containing a litter of romer-anian p-ipplies.

'I am study ng ithynology, and I wish to purchase a live snake,' said Maud.

'I have some specimens, ma'am. Of what species did you require one?" he asked.

'I should like to see a rattlesnaks, if you have one."

have one."
The old man went into the back room, and presently returned holding a glittering snake rmly by the nape.
This is the finest rattlesnake in my collection, ma'am."

"But it is fangless, or you would not dare touch it," said Maud, derisively.

"You are in error, ma'am. I would not loose my present hold of it for all the world's riches; for no earthly power could save my life if it once struck me," he answered.

"It is a beautiful creature! I will purchase it if you will carefully inclose it in a box for me. You can name your own price," she aided, seeing the man hesitated.

The naturalist seemed amazed beyond expression. He was on the point of retusing to barter it, fearing his visitor was insane; but his cupidity got the better of his principle, and he shut up the serpent in a small case, fastened the lid securely down, received payment for it, and bowed the fair girl out of his shop.

replaced the box in her rock six leave, to her friends.

Soon after Cecil arose to take his leave.

Emily accompanied Cecil to the door—a lover's privilege. With terrible anxiety.

Mand awaited some sign that the reptile had done its work.

The half-suppressed exclamation reached her where she sat, and she trembled in every lime. It was Cecil's voice, and she fancied the death-blow had been struck!

"What was the matter, Emily? I heard Mr. Firmstone utter a cry of pain." she said, when her cousin re-entered the room,

Maud retired to her chamber and com-

The bird fluttered and wrestled on the floor, and Maud flew to his aid, fearing he was in a fit; but she recoiled when she saw that his strong beak was fastened securely in
